Growth's fuelled

HOXTON Park business Eureka Insulation has almost doubled its staff since the Federal Government's insulation rebates started three months ago.

Owners Tony and Wendy Arundell said the rebate came in the nick of time.

"There has been a huge growth in demand for insulation services, particularly for what we call 'mums and dads' residential properties," Mrs Arundell said.

"This has allowed our business to grow even more than it has been able to for the last 27 years."

In June, the company opened a new factory to accommodate a call centre and more warehouses to meet the increased demand.

"We were able to hire another 20 employees," she said. "At the same time, we are ensuring our professionalism and the quality of our service remains high so we will still be around after the rebate has finished."

Mrs Arundell says households should grab the chance for free insulation as it is a cost effective and environmentally-friendly way to control temperature.

"Insulation can make a difference of eight to 12 degrees and means people don't need to run their heaters and air conditioners for as long," she said.

The insulation rebates continue until December 2011 and most average, three-bedroom houses are eligible, she said.
