MARYANN WRIGHT

AS a student, poet and teacher, Lachlan Brown is no stranger to the secondary and tertiary education system.

After finishing high school in 1999 with a UAI of 99.7, Mr Brown has returned to teach at his alma mater, William Carey Christian School at Prestons.

His studies have taken him far and wide, most recently to Paris after winning the Marten Bequest Arts prize for poetry.

"The award is given to young Australians to pursue their artistic interests overseas," he said. "I am inspired by people in local communities, those on the edges of cities, and so I wrote poetry about the outer suburbs of Paris which are very similar to western Sydney."

Mr Brown completed a University of Sydney Bachelor of Arts media and communications degree, with honours, immediately after school and he will soon graduate with a PhD in English literature.

When asked what inspired him to return to William Carey to teach biblical studies, he said:

"I like the idea of children being inspired by people who love learning."

"William Carey has a good intellectual atmosphere where students can think deeply."

Mr Brown plans to keep studying and do some post-doctoral research at the University of Sydney. He also wants to continue writing poetry and hopes to publish a book soon.

"It's very important for people to always be contemplating big issues in life and that's what poetry, theology and philosophy allow me to do," he said.
